USRVDTC Obedience and Rally Trials August 15, 16, & 17

From the 2008 Obedience Trial Chairman:

Well the 2008 trials are almost done. The three days went fairly well and I wish to thank everyone who helped this year especially the many chairpersons involved in putting on these trials, Darcy Bartholomay (Secretary), Theresa Mathis (Chief Steward), Shyne Brothers (Trophies and Security), and Abbie Zaladonis (Hospitality). Also a special thanks to Paw Powers 4-H Club for providing food for our trial.

I am not sure how many of you are aware, but we did have a very serious incident with one exhibitor this year. Several complaints were made about this individual and the trial committee is in the process of taking care of this and will report to the membership after it has been concluded. It also brought to the forefront other AKC rules that were broken. You know, We have a wonderfully relaxing trial and that is why our exhibitors like to come here, however We have allowed ourselves to become too relaxed concerning these rules.

To begin with We had some individuals that were observed not complying with AKC rules this year, as there were several infractions committed over the three days. One infraction was several dogs were seen off lead when not in the ring, another was puppies being walked around the ring area, and another was some unentered adult dogs around the ring area. As to the unentered dogs I know it is very hard to keep this under control as many people like to come to the park and walk their dogs and they see our event in progress and come over to watch, but We really need to be more cognizant of what is permitted at our events and politely tell these people that they are more than welcome to watch but we really can't have unentered dogs around the rings.

It is possible we could have an AKC Rep. decide to pay us a visit next year just because it sounds like a good idea. But with Alice possibly still provisional for Utility the possibility could be higher. Don't get me wrong I am not saying that this should be the only reason to follow the rules. The fact is if We, as a club, allow these infractions to continue, anyone could decide to file charges against us and our club could be suspended and fined.

I'll get off My soapbox now and thanks again to everyone for their invaluable help.

Duane Loomis
2008 Obedience Trial Chairman

From the Loomis'

At our trial, in Rally Novice B, Rider earned a 95, a 98 (first place), and a 90 (third place) to earn his RN Title and Sage earned a 91, an 89 (third place) and a 96 (first place) to earn his RN Title. I am especially proud of Sage as this was his first time at an event where he had to think while in the ring.

In Obedience, Rider and Sage teamed up in Brace to earn a 183 (first place). For which I had many spectators impressed, as they had never seen a brace doing Obedience.

From Mary Lee Moore

I am really proud of “Danny” Windabrae Wings of Time CD RN. He earned his CDX in three shows in Blackfoot with two first places and one second place. Then at our trial, he completed his RA with a 95 fourth place. We met our goal for ‘08

Roshia and Fred Adams have a new little Golden girl at their house. Her name is “Lexie” and she came to them from Montana. Elle and Melody are happy to have a new little sister to play with.

From the Haller's

Saturday at USRVDTTC Trail:

Bo got his first CD leg

Ivy got her first CD leg with a 4TH Place

Sunday at USRVDTTC Trail:

Training Tip of the Month

Fall is a great time to start dogs tracking. The following article by Craig Green was taken from his website <http://www.basset.net/track.html> where you can find many more articles dealing with starting dogs, problem solving and many others topics relating to tracking. .

Obedience is Government; Tracking is Business
by Craig Green
Tally-Ho: May/April 1996

Some obedience trainers try to apply forceful techniques to tracking; often with limited success. With some high-energy working and herding breeds, these techniques may work. With hounds however, they usually don't.

Obedience is too often like government -- if the dog does not do what you want, you force him to obey. That's what "obedience" means (see dissenting opinion from my wife Kay later in this article). Tracking is like business -- you have to sell your customer (the dog) on your product (tracking). He doesn't have to buy it. Unlike most obedience methods, you have to persuade, convince, plead and if necessary, beg. It requires the utmost in humility, patience and respect for the dog. If you can't get the customer to buy your product, you close your business (stop training) and either try again later or go on to another dog or activity.

The customer is in charge. Your job is to find out what turns him on so he will spend his precious time doing what you want him to do. It ain't easy. In fact, some novice trainers may do better than experienced ones in tracking, since they lack the overbearing confidence that they know what is right. Only the dog knows what will motivate him to track, and it's your job to find out what that is. Motivation, Motivation, Motivation

I have said it before, and I'll say it again -- successful tracking essentially requires one thing: proper motivation. Everything you do in tracking is designed to get the dog to think it was his idea; not yours. If the dog is not happy, then you, the tracking entrepreneur (investing time, taking risks and suffering consequences) must find a way to make him happy. That means finding something that "turns on" your dog. I cannot emphasize too strongly how this is the exact opposite of most forms of obedience. If you try to force a hound to track, you will soon learn who is really in charge when you're 20 feet behind him on a tracking lead (hint: it's not you).

Occasionally, I have seen a friend begin tracking with an exceptional dog. The dog has high energy, a passion for tracking, and seems to progress easily even when the handler makes mistakes. I know three people who have each trained and exhibited two dogs to TDX titles without ever flunking a tracking test! But none were hounds.

Virtually all Basset Hounds use their noses to explore the world, but more than this is required for tracking -- following the tracklayer's scent. Often, tracking hounds "go into business" for themselves; taking off after the scent of a deer, rabbit or other distraction. It is your job as trainer to encourage them to track the right scent, while keeping them interested and happy. In our training, this usually consists of two kinds of motivation: tracking and post-tracking.

Motivation While Tracking

While the dog is tracking, there are several things that can be motivating (or de-motivating), such as weather conditions, age of track, difficulty and type of article or reward at the end of the track. We always strive to assess the dog's attitude during and after a training session. If he is extremely tired or frustrated, we make sure that he immediately has fun afterwards. Also, we plan the next training session to be easy and fun, to compensate for today's difficulty. If he has lost interest in finding the glove (even with food on it), then we try to find out what will turn him on at the end of the track. In my last column I mentioned the leather chewie at the end of our first TDX dog's training tracks, right up until his final TDX test, which he passed.

Motivation After Tracking

As I have discussed before in this series, one of our favorite motivational techniques is to go for a fun walk after training. This should preferably be in an area where the dog can safely walk off lead (This of course depends on your dog's willingness not to run away -- a problem for some Bassets). You can use treats to encourage the dog to stay near you so you won't have to drive to the next county to retrieve a free-spirited hound.

Another technique we use is "Dairy Queen Magic." After tracking, we often go to the Dairy Queen store, and get each dog a small cup of vanilla soft-serve ice cream (CAUTION: I understand chocolate is poisonous to dogs). You should see their eyes light up when we put the dish in their crates! Along with the after-tracking walk in the field, this lets them know that going out to track is always fun, even after a tough workout. "Dairy Queen Magic" also works for obedience and conformation -- and you can never provide too much motivation. Remember, we are trying to get our customer to give us repeat business. We are not trying to force him to do what we want. Following are comments from my wife Kay, who was the Tally Ho obedience columnist from 1982 to 1986:

Dissenting Opinion From Kay

In my experience, obedience with a Basset Hound must use many of the same motivational techniques that we use in tracking. In fact, I consider obedience to be a joyous display of learned skills; not a competition to see whose dog can get the highest score. So, I don't use the kind of force most obedience trainers' use, except in unusual circumstances.

I have seen some people use force on Bassets in obedience, which sometimes seems to work in training. However, when the day of the first trial comes around, the trainer wonders why the dog does not work the way he did in class. I (Kay) have trained many Bassets in conformation, obedience and tracking. Through the years I have learned that it's better to outsmart Basset Hounds than to use force, even in obedience. At the beginning of obedience training, I assess each individual dog's temperament, willingness and ability. Then, I custom-design a training program just for that dog. This is essentially the same approach Craig and I use in tracking.

Conclusion

I hope this article gives you some insight into the psychology of training a hound to track. Due to their stubborn nature, you cannot expect Basset Hounds to respond to the methods used successfully by trainers of other, more willing breeds. The Basset Hound possesses a wonderful nose and most have a natural tracking ability. However, their stubborn nature means you have to treat them with the respect of a businessperson soliciting customers rather than the heavy-handed policeman forcing them to obey your law.
